

Jamba and Opera Software Partner to Integrate Premier Content into Mobile Browsers

Opera links Jamba bookmark to enable faster Web browsing

LOS ANGELES, Calif. / BERLIN, Germany / OSLO, Norway, August 18, 2008 – Jamba (also widely known as Jamster), a leading provider of mobile entertainment, today announced a global partnership with Opera Software, an industry leader in the development of Web browsers for the desktop, device and mobile markets, to add the Jamba bookmark on Opera Mini's customized browser homepage. The service offers a wide range of mobile products such as music, games, video, graphics, applications and much more.

As part of the partnership, the Opera Mini homepage now includes a Jamba bookmark allowing users to access the Jamba wireless application protocol (WAP) site with one easy click. Subscribers can subsequently view original Web programming and discover a variety of their favorite entertainment from major games publishers, as well as some of the top-ranked programming from Fox Mobile Entertainment Network, including The Simpsons, 24, Family Guy, Nip/Tuck, NASCAR, Dog Whisperer.

Kaj Hagros, COO of Jamba, said, "Users are not only becoming increasingly familiar with the idea of accessing the Web with their phones, but also desire a rich mobile Web experience regardless of the device they use. Our goal is to provide consumers the best branded and original mobile content across every conceivable platform, anywhere in the world. Opera Software is the only company that puts the Web on any device, and was a natural partner for Jamba to extend easy, on-demand access to our premium content for customers across the globe."

Opera brings full Internet content and images to any device, from computers and cell phones to portable media players and game consoles. With more than 100 million shipped installations since 2004, Opera Software is the proven solution for Web browsing on a mobile device for nearly 15 million people each month.

"The Web is going wireless. Our goal is to help everyone use their favorite Web sites or services, from any device," said Tatsuki Tomita, VP of Consumer Products, Opera Software. "Valuable partners like Jamba are crucial to this mission. The combination of our mobile distribution partnership with Jamba will ensure that mobile users get immediate access to their favorite content with the convenience of a simple click!"
